48. (Currently Amended) A field-structured sensor to measure an environmental parameter, comprising:

a) a field-structured composite comprising a solid nonconducting medium, and an ordered aggregate structure of conducting magnetic particles within said medium;

b) electrodes positioned to allow the electrical resistance of said composite to be measured; and,

C' c) a coupling mechanism which couples the environmental parameter to said composite ~~The field-structured sensor of claim 29~~, wherein the environmental parameter is concentration of a selected chemical in a background carrier, and the coupling mechanism exposes the composite to said carrier.

49. (Previously added) The field-structured sensor of claim 48, wherein the nonconducting medium changes volume when exposed to the selected chemical.

50. (Previously added) The field-structured sensor of claim 48, wherein the surface stress of the nonconducting medium changes when exposed to the selected chemical.
